"I Did Not Know I Could Buy a Suit Like This for $25

said a woman in our Suit Department yesterday. "The style is so clever and the materials are so good."

The suit she referred to was:

A wistaria velvet suit with a smart little collar of marten, the skirt has a broad pleat in front and back, the coat is trim and stylish.

This is only one of the many attractive suits which we have in our Suit Salon for $25.

There are velvet suits in African brown, plum, wistaria, navy blue and green. They have collars and cuffs of fur.

There are soft, rich, satiny broadcloths in all the new Autumn shades. Some have a touch of Military braid and buttons in clusters. The styles are jaunty and becoming, choker or Romeo collars and cuffs of fur. The price is $25.

There are serges, gabardines, whipcords and tweeds in strictly or semi-tailored style.

THE PRELIMINARIES

National League Park, Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 8.—After hours of depressing uncertainty the announcement from the National Commission that despite a wet and soggy field the champion Phillies of the National league and the victorious Boston Red Sox of the American circuit would meet this afternoon in the first game of the world's series, brought unbounded joy to the thousands of followers of baseball here to witness the start of the 1915 battle for the highest honors of the game.

The announcement came at 10:45 o'clock and there was an immediate rush for the Phillips' park. The bleacher gates were thrown open at 11 o'clock and here 7,549 rosters found accommodations at $1 a head. No one found only a scattering of reserved seat holders in the grandstand.

Up to 10 o'clock it seemed a game would hardly be possible, but an unexpected breaking away of the gloomy clouds influenced the decision of the umpires to recommend that the series start on scheduled time.

By noon the soaked base paths had been covered with dry sand, but the pitcher's box was in pretty bad shape, the ground on either side of the plate was little less than a quagmire. The grassy outfield was in fair shape.

At 12:45 the home players made their appearance and received a noisy greeting from the diehardites, the grandstands still being lit a picture of empty benches.

The Phillips made a careful inspection of the field. The ground in front of the players' benches was almost ankle deep in mud.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, idol of the Philadelphia fans and the hope of the home team in the series, got a special greeting when he was recognized.

The entire Philadelphia pitching staff, with the exception of Alexander, soon started to loosen up their arms.

Shortly before 1 o'clock gasoline was spread along the base paths and set on fire in an further attempt to dry the ground.

While the "burning out" was in progress Alexander engaged in batting practice down the right field foul line.

The Red Sox reached the park at 12:50 and there was a cheer for the visitors.

The batting practice was sharp. Mayes served up the benders for Boston's lancing practice while Al Dene took the pitching mount when the Phillips took their turn.

Though the infield was sodden with the heavy rain the fielding practice of both the Phillips and Philadelphia was surprisingly fast. The stands at 1:45 o'clock were practically filled. Down off third base the royal roosters with an industrious brass band kept things lively.
